Inclusive Education

Model positive and caring teacher-teacher relationships

A suggestion for implementing the strategy 'Foster positive relationships and partnerships' from the Guide: Behaviour and learning

Includes: The influence of teacher attitude Move towards collegial relationships Model quality relationships Reflective questions

The influence of teacher attitude

Consider the influence you have on others.

Since your attitudes and values (as a teacher) are continuously conveyed to students by your actions – particularly your interactions with others – the most powerful influence in your programme is probably your own attitude.

Source:

Mental health education and hauora: Teaching interpersonal skills, resilience, and wellbeing (p. 14) https://www.nzcer.org.nz/nzcerpress/mental-health-education

Move towards collegial relationships

Teachers are role models.

Four types of relationships amongst adults commonly exist in schools:

- Parallel play where everyone busily gets on, in a selfabsorbed way, working in isolation.
- Adversarial relationships where people compete with each other to develop their own resources and reputations, often putting the practices of others down.
- Congenial relationships where people are friendly, interested, and concerned about each other but don't share professional ideas.
- Collegial relationships where the focus is on talking with each other, and sharing knowledge about professional matters.

In what ways could you contribute to a culture where collegial relationships are more dominant in your school?

Model quality relationships

A teacher describes how the quality of the relationships between the adults in a classroom influences the students.

Video hosted on Vimeo http://vimeo.com/159138435 Closed Captions

Source:

Ministry of Education | Te Tāhuhu o te Mātauranga https://vimeo.com/user25073968

Reflective questions

Consider these statements from the Wellbeing@School survey.School leaders encourage staff to share ideas rather than compete with each other.Reflect on your response and its influence on students.Staff always behave how they would like students to behave.Staff treat each other with respect.Staff treat each other with respect.Staff have a strong sense of belonging.Staff have a strong sense of belonging.

This information was downloaded/printed from the Ministry of Education's website "Inclusive Education". Except where otherwise noted it is Crown Copyright 2018.

Information on the Inclusive Education website is regularly updated so we recommend you check the website version of this information to ensure it remains current.