What true partnership looks like

We are true partners
when:

- ✓ you listen to what I have to say
- ✓ you acknowledge my intelligence
- ✓ you want to learn more about my ways
- ✓ you don't judge me
- ✓ you engage me in genuine dialogue
- ✓ we make decisions together
- ✓ you show that my child matters to you
- ✓ you include my experience, knowledge, and viewpoints with yours.

Expect different perspectives

Parents and whānau will have different perspectives on diversity and inclusion, and different expectations of partnership.

Seek to understand:

- their values and beliefs about disability and inclusion
- their own experiences of learning
- their hopes and dreams for their child
- their fears and anxieties
- their expectations around how their child will be supported in the classroom and in the playground.

Where parent and whānau values and expectations differ from those of your school, be open to learning from them.

Address common parental concerns

Parents of children with special education needs found that some schools were not open to working with them, and they felt that they were unwelcome. They struggled with entrenched attitudes by some school staff about their child and his or her learning or behavioural needs. For some parents, labelling their child and themselves, sometimes linked to previous family history with the school, undermined the development of constructive relationships.
