

Support information sharing

Model your commitment to inclusion in the way your school shares information with families and the wider community.

- Use a variety of communication methods, including face-to-face communication, newsletters translated into Pacific languages, telephone contact, and home-school communication notebooks.
- Include illustrated success stories about all students.
- Share ongoing stories of your school's commitment to inclusive practices and next steps.
- Make materials available in the languages of your school community.
- Ensure that written material is supported with graphics to support understanding.
- Clearly explain how parents can connect with teachers and support staff at your school to talk about their child.
- Offer digital and hard copy materials, so that families can select an access option that works best for them.
- Extend open invitations for parents to join the school parent and teacher group, and other groups they can belong and contribute to.
